FATAL SLIP OF HAND.

Brookline Physician Wrote "Drachms" Instead of "Drops."

Boston, Oct. 3.—Medicine containing an excessive quantity of opium, and due to a physician's unconscious mistake was declared to have been the cause of Aida P. Ross, a Brookline child, by Harvey H. Baker, a special justice of the Brookline municipal court today. The physician is not blamed by the justice.

"The physician called," says Justice Baker, "in signifying the quantity of tincture of opium in his prescription, intended to write ten drops, but actually wrote ten drachms. I find this variance between intent and act to be due to one of those failures of the hand to follow the direction of the will, which are of common occurrence, and the physician was not in any way conscious of the variance."
